++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Widespread rain arriving overnight.

Today:
A wet and windy start in the south, with a risk of gales along southern coasts. Rain will soon clear, leaving many parts dry, although some patchy rain may remain in the north. Winds easing through the day. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Tonight:
After a dry start, a large area of rain will soon arrive from the southwest during the night, heavy at times and possibly falling as snow, particularly over hills. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Saturday:
Outbreaks of rain continuing for most, falling as snow over hills and possibly lower levels too. Turning drier in the afternoon with clear spells. Windy, particularly along the south coast. Maximum temperature 4 deg C (39 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
A cold, frosty and dry start on Sunday, with rain and strong winds later. Dry with sunny spells on Monday. Tuesday will be milder with further outbreaks of rain.
